5. Attitude : Through visits and story extension activities, children can experience and participate personally, stimulating their interest in government and public affairs. This interactive learning method helps to increase students' interest and participation in learning.

suggestion:

1. Provide relevant pre-knowledge: Before the activity, children can be provided with some basic knowledge about the operations of the legislature and government so that they can better understand and participate in the activity.

2. Guide thinking and discussion: During story extension activities, children are encouraged to ask questions, express opinions and conduct group discussions. This promotes the development of their thinking and critical thinking skills.

3. Create opportunities for interaction and participation: Design some interactive sessions, such as role-playing, group activities or debates, etc., to allow children to actively participate and express their opinions.

4. Encourage practical participation: Encourage children to participate in civic activities in communities and schools, allowing them to transform their learning and awareness into practical actions, and cultivate civic participation abilities.

Through the above suggestions and activity arrangements, children's learning and development can be promoted. Through visits and interactive activities, they will gain practical experience in the legislature and civic responsibilities, enhance their understanding and interest in government and public affairs, and cultivate good citizenship and values. At the same time, such activities can also improve learning interest and participation of children, and achieve activity aims.
